Match-Play Windup Comets' Aquí Scores Two as Dynamos Lose

A 'Family' Shootout

By JOSEPH SANCHEZ
Denver Post Sports Writer

FORT COLLINS, Colo. — There's this stately, 48-room brick mansion standing proudly at 1029 Broadway in Boulder. They call it the Evans Scholar House, but it's really something of a rehabilitation center for young golf addicts, perhaps seeking "the cure" through education at the University of Colorado.

To Tom Woodard and Mark Crabtree, fun-loving 19-year-olds, Evans House is home.

So Sunday, when the 1975 Colorado state match play championship is decided here on the Collindale Golf Course, it's going to be something of a family affair.

Woodard and Crabtree, who share Evans House with 36 other scholar-golfers (there will be 54 next year) are the finalists in the tournament, both having impressive scores in Saturday's quarter and semi-final rounds.

Woodard, who earned his scholarship caddying at Denver's City Park Golf Course and studying at Manual High School, defeated Ed Holloway one-up in the Saturday morning quarterfinals before overwhelming Mark Fowler 6 and 4 with a four-under-par effort in the afternoon semis.

Crabtree, a graduate of Fort Collins' Rocky Mountain High School and a "charger" caddy at the five-year-old Collindale Course, posted a one-up morning victory over Jim Greer before defeating Jim Dennerline 4 and 3 in the semifinals.

Teammates on the University of Colorado golf team that finished third in the Big Eight last year, Crabtree and Woodard were to tee it up at 8 a.m. in a 36-hole finale to determine who gets to carry the trophy through the Evans House door next September when both return to school.

Maybe, in the interest of domestic tranquility, they'll carry it in together.

"We do everything together . . . eat, sleep, party," said Crabtree. "I've probably played more golf with Woody than anybody."

"Yeah," nodded Woodard. "We're supposed to room together next year."

Woodard, crediting his semifinal victim's father, CU Coach Les Fowler, for improving his short game, said that and the openness of the young Collindale track were the reasons for his strong play.

"This is my home course," he joked for the benefit of Crabtree. "I won the Collindale Invitational here earlier this summer. It's wide open and I can swing on it (hit long without fear of spraying). I hit nothing but nine-irons and wedges all day."

He was a four-under for 14 holes in the semis against Fowler (his former teammate), winning 13 and 14 with birdie putts of 15 and 5 feet to close out the match.

Like his good buddy, Crabtree, too, finished strong in turning back Dennerline, another Boulderite who perhaps contributed to his own undoing with a costly error on the 12th green.

The two players were even after 11 holes and looking at routine pars on the par-five 12th when Dennerline mis-spotted his ball on the green, forgetting he had moved it a club length when he first marked it.

That cost him the hole and he quickly went two down on 13 when he put his second shot in a ditch. Crabtree went three up and one-under for the day with a neat 7-foot birdie putt on 14, then closed out the match on the 220-yard par-three 15th when he chipped to a "gimme" and Dennerline missed a 5-footer to save par.

Putting, both Crabtree and Woodard agree, will be the key to Sunday's championship. "We know how each other play," said Crabtree. "He'll be hitting it longer and I'll be hitting it straighter. It will just depend on who knocks the most putts."

Shoe, Tempers Soar; Nastase Gets Boot

WASHINGTON — (AP) — Ilie Nastase defaulted his quarterfinal match with Cliff Richey Saturday in the $100,000 Washington Star International Tennis Tournament by failing to resume play when ordered to by the referee.

Nastase was disqualified after an uproar which saw an irate Richey storm and in Tucson against Australian Ken Rosewall, with Rosewall returning to the court and losing.

"How many times do you have to take that?" he asked to another player who was looking on. "He can do it to everybody else but when it's turned around on him, he says 'what haply conducted his postmortem. "There is more to giving 100 per cent than just running around like crazy and getting nothing done."

Young pointed out that mental lapses are continuing to hurt the Dynamos.

"We are now looking for players that will help us next year, but I didn't see much out there tonight. It was the worst performance by a Denver team this year."

It seemed like the entire first half was played in front of the Baltimore goal, but Motaung's fourth goal of the season was all the Dynamos could get.

In the first five minutes alone, Ace Ntsoelengue and Ngcobo took dead aim on the Baltimore goal and missed.

The second-half was much the same. Ntsoelengue's header off a corner kick early in the half hit the crossbar and went over. Defender Malcolm Dawes had a chance on a crossover pass, but couldn't quite catch up and didn't get a good kick at the ball.

The fleet-footed Ngcobo got away on a break, but was pushed off course by defender Len Renery and didn't get a good shot.

And late in the half, Ngcobo's low corner kick seemed to bounce through everybody in front of the Baltimore goal and was harmlessly kicked away.

Denver goalie Bruce Brown didn't have much work as Baltimore's offense was kept well in check for most of the game.

"They really got only two good chances to score and they made both of them," Young commented.

The winner was one of those chances Aquí came up with the ball out of a scrimmage near midfield and headed toward the Denver goal. Defender Jeff Solem picked him up and appeared he might halt the threat, but Aquí won out and punched the ball past Brown.

Friendship Doesn't Stop Golfer Crabtree

By JOSEPH SANCHEZ
Denver Post Sports Writer

FORT COLLINS, Colo. — Mark Crabtree and Tom Woodard are a "perfect match."

They don't look alike, and they don't play golf very much alike, either.

Woodard, a tall, lean young black is the more dramatic of the two with his long hitting and his on-again, off-again flashes of brilliance around the greens.

Crabtree, on the other hand, is a young Caucasian of average size and is the solid, straight-down-the-middle, more-consistent player.

But in the Evans House where they both live as Eisenhower-Evans scholarship students at the University of Colorado and on most golf courses, they are virtual equals.

Sunday, however, they were matched on the Collindale Golf Course where Crabtree grew up in Fort Collins for the Colorado State Match Play Championship.

Predictably, Crabtree made the most of that advantage, beating his good buddy

1-up in one of the most thrilling finishes in state match-play history.

The finish was typical of the entire match as one player, Crabtree, was coasting along with a three-hole lead when the other, Woodard, made a big move to swing the momentum in his favor only to run out of holes before he could complete the reversal.

Roles Reverse

Crabtree, who had watched in frustration in the morning round as almost every Woodard approach shot smothered the flag, was enjoying the same good fortune in the afternoon round and was three-up after 15 (33) holes.

On the 220-yard par-three 15th, however, Woodard regained his touch, running in a 15-footer for a birdie two to cut the margin to one before curling in a "lag" 25-footer on 16 for a birdie three and a one-hole deficit.

He just missed a high curve putt of about 25 feet on 17 that would have evened the match, as he had Crabtree so unnerved at that point that he pulled an easy, uphill two-footer for birdie and what would have been a closeout.

That took them to where they both had short approaches. Woodard hit his high of the hole and about 10 feet away, while Crabtree again knocked his within two feet of the hole.

"I figured there was no way he was going to hit the green," moaned Woodard, "and he puts it up like that."

"I was just going to try to put it in the middle," smiled Crabtree, "but he put it close, and I decided to go ahead and try to put a good swing on it."

Third Birdie

Without hesitation, the step-up-and-hit-it Woodard knocked in his 10-footer, one putting for the third time in four holes to make a birdie three and add considerable pressure to Crabtree's little sidehill putt.

This time, however, Crabtree aimed it on the high side of the hole, and it caught just enough to curl in and close out the match, giving the twosome four birdies on the last four holes.

For Woodard, the match marked the end of four marathon days (38 holes a day) of repeated tribulation, most of it off the course. Friday, for example, he played the morning round barefoot after hitching a ride with a friend from Denver that you're beaten the very best in the world.

"And, after what happened in Augusta, it means even more to me to beat Jack. It really adds something to it."
Weiskopf, who scored a dramatic birdie on the first extra hole, benefited from two Nicklaus' lapses and a little putting lesson Jack gave him early in the week.
"He asked me about his putting," Nicklaus said. "He was lining up right with his hands pressed forward. I told him if he was going to press his hands who had matching golf shoes in the trunk of his car. Woodard, in a hurry, jumped out of the car and grabbed the two right-footed shoes, leaving his buddy with the two left ones. Saturday, he got more of the same kind of trouble, when he hitched a ride back to Denver and was left at the Boulder exchange where he had to make another connection to get home.

Even his Sunday prediction went wrong. "I thought if I played even par, I'd win," he groaned. "Shoot. I go one under and lose."

68 for Crabtree

Woodard, who won the Collindale Invitational here earlier this summer, finished two under at 69 in the afternoon round to Crabtree's three-under 68.

"I didn't have him until I made that last putt," said Crabtree of his University of Colorado golf teammate. "I just knew I had to make my putt, and I was just glad I was that close. He made a heck of a putt."

The massive trophy that goes to the champion, Crabtree said, will be taken to the Evans House when both players return to school in September. "I don't know where we're going to put it though," he said. "The rooms are so small, I don't know where it'll fit."

at the end of the first closing 68, two under 67.

"We'll start to touch briefly on the kicking game, which we have let go so far. I haven't talked to Chuck Knox (Los Angeles coach), but we may want to do a little kicking under fire Saturday."

The Denver coach would say nothing about any possible impending trades, but added the club is on the phones daily and one or two still could materialize.

He wants to pare the current 78-man roster anywhere from 10 to 13 men by the time they break camp, and several were expected to be let go Monday morning after overnight film study and late coaches' meetings.

He was generally pleased with last Saturday's hour-and-10-minute scrimmage.

On offense, the Broncos are well ahead of previous years in terms of number of plays already installed.

Offensive coordinator Max Coley estimated they have taken on perhaps twice as much as in previous first weeks, largely because there has been little turnover and experience men are returning at every spot.

There are no frills in yet and there won't be until the Broncos get deeper into the exhibition campaign, Ralston said, adding he probably will run a basic offense against the Colts in the Aug. 9 Mile High Stadium opener.

Broncos Pare Six From Roster

POMONA, Calif. — Denver Bronco Coach John Ralston reduced the club roster to 72 Monday by cutting six players.

Cut were defensive backs Charlie Johnson, Bernard Parks and Reggie Echols, wide receiver Charles McKee and offensive linemen Jim Weatherley and Chuck Mandril.

The club now lists 39 players on offense and 33 on defense. Included among the 72 are Louis Wright and Drew Mahalic, who are in Chicago for Friday night College All-Star game and won't report until Saturday morning. Ralston plans to get them right into action by using them in the Los Angeles scrimmage later Saturday.

Player representative Ray May returned to camp over the weekend from negotiations in Washington, and probably will head east again late in the week for another round of talks.
